

Brumer, Wilson

CEO
Usiminas

Wilson Nélío Brumer is the CEO of Usiminas and was Chairman of the Management Board of the company from 2008 to 2010. He is also co-founder and partner of Winbros Participações, Gestão e Empreendimentos.

From 2003 to 2007 he was the Secretary of Economic Development for the State of Minas Gerais, responsible for the coordination of funding towards fostering industry, trade, and service sector. During that period, he also chaired the Management Boards of Cemig, Companhia de Desenvolvimento Econômico de Minas Gerais, and Instituto de Desenvolvimento Integrado de Minas Gerais, and was the Vice-President of the Management Board of Banco de Desenvolvimento de Minas Gerais (BDMG).

Wilson Brumer also chaired the Management Board of BHP Billiton, Brazil (1998-2002) and was the CEO of Acesita (1992-1998) and Vale (1990-1992). From 1997 to 1999 he presided the Board of Directors of Instituto Brasileiro de Siderurgia (IBS), currently called Instituto Aço Brasil (IABr).

USIMINAS

Founded in the 1960's, Usiminas is Latin America's biggest flat steel group, with 9.5 million tons/year production capacity. It operates across the entire steel production chain with four integrated business units, namely: Mining, Steelmaking, Steel Processing and Capital Goods. The Company holds a leadership position in the Brazilian flat steel market with a strategy focused on market segments that require higher value-added products and services, such as the automotive, shipbuilding, oil & gas, machinery, civil construction and white line, among others.